

Lot # 3000 Alaska, Anchorage Choice Anchorage Nugget Token
Anchorage / Native Virgin / "actual gold nugget" / Gold & Copper / Alaska // Lumber / Dairy / Livestock / Agriculture / Gold / Copper / Coal / Fish / image of sun, "Midnight Sun". Round, copper, 31mm, With original 4mm loop as issued. Walter A. Lord Co-Jeweler, AU 55. There is some confusion among collectors about this token. One should understand that they were all struck by the token mfg. co., sans the gold nugget and loop. In 1923, after the Anchorage jeweler, Walter A. Lord Co., received them, he then soldered on the gold nuggets that he acquired from the many local miners. He also added a loop on some, so that the customer had a choice. This was just good business sense. That means these tokens were originally issued in two styles, with the loop and without. The presence of a loop does not necessarily mean that the token has been altered from its original issued form. (from TokenCatalog.com) Est. $2,000 ~ $3,000 HWAC# 41915

Government. Once the federal loans were repaid, accrued interest remained in a revolving fund from which ARRC continued to make loans to farmers and others involved in agricultural pursuits. Lot # 3002 Alaska, Complete Set of Alaska ACCR Tokens 1935
Rare! Complete set of Alaska ACCR tokens from 1935. The set is 1c-$10. Included is the original plexiglas holder. These were only used from 1935-36 when they were collected and destroyed... they are VERY hard to come by these days and a full set is almost unheard of anymore. The Alaska Rural Rehabilitation Corporation (ARRC) was incorporated in 1935 under the laws of the territory of Alaska. It was founded as a non-profit organization under the direction of the Department of Interior and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration to administer the colony of 202 families being relocated from the mid-west. The participants in this relocation were allocated a house, 40 acres of land, necessary tools and equipment. The federal government provided loan money to enable the colonists to set up their farms and get established. ARRC administered those long-term, low-interest loans and became the entity for managing and operating the agricultural project on behalf of the United States

TOKENS

Lot # 3005 California, Bodie Temple Saloon, Delury & Garcia, Bodie Token Ultra-rare Bodie token, c.1890. Temple Saloon / Delury & Garcia / Bodie, Cal. // 12 1/2 / Cents. NGC, XF 40. Brass, 25mm. Probably the finest known graded. Only known saloon token from this famous Mono County mining camp. George Delury's story is a familiar one for those who tried to strike it rich in California and Nevada. He first tried his luck on the Comstock Lode in the 1870s. There he met Isabella Ward, who would later become his wife in 1888. When Virginia City began its decline, George followed the excitement south and joined his brother John in Bodie in 1882. (John had been working as a butcher in Kilgore's Union Market on Main Street.) George bought the Temple Saloon with Rosalio Garcia in the late 1880s. The Temple burned down in 1892, but they rebuilt it. That same year, Delury was elected Justice of the Peace for the Bodie Township. Delury also served on the Wide Awake Hose Company (Bodie Fire Department). Bella married him in Bodie in 1888 but returned to her home town (Virginia City) to give birth to their two children: Eva in 1889, and Savilla in 1892. Lot # 3017 California, San Francisco Joseph Brothers Store Card

Token (Gold Rush Jeweler) c.1850 Obv.: Joseph Brothers / of Liverpool Eng. / watch makers/ jewelers opticians/ general importers / 149 Montgomery St. / San Francisco, Cal.; rev: cheapest house/ in California for / good watches /diamonds / jewelry/ silverware cutlery &c. Br., 29mm. The Joseph Brothers were one of the many California Gold Rush jewelers. They are one of only a very few who issued coins or storecards during the 1850's. In fact, Joseph Brothers were among a handful of San Francisco merchants who commissioned to have California small denomination gold coined as early as 1852. All are exceedingly rare. This storecard was made in the late 1850's, after the firm moved from 175 Clay Street to 149 Montgomery Street. Here, they were located among the coiners and assayers so it is no surprise they issued their own coins for advertising. They did not follow in the footsteps of another famous Gold Rush jeweler, John L. Moffat, whose gold coins and ingots are now legendary. During our pursuit of the finest pioneer minor coinage over the past two years, we were able to acquire three specimens. There remains a group of people, particularly treasure hunters, who still believe these ingots are original and legitimate.

The Father (Padre) Kino Story

Kino was born Eusebio Kino in northern Italy in August 1645. At the age of 18 he became so sick that he vowed if cured, he'd become a missionary for the Church. Highly schooled in science and math, Kino was chosen for a mission to New Spain, "the New World." In 1678 he left for Genoa to go to the New World, but the group of Jesuits missed their boat, and, instead of taking the "next boats" which were slave boats designed to go to Africa to take slaves and then venture to the New World, it took them three years to get onboard another ship. Once ashore in the New World, Kino then made his way to Sonora, Mexico, then north into the Santa Cruz and Gila River regions in Arizona. He settled for a time in Baja California, drawing attention to the fact that California was NOT an island, as reported on all the maps, and they could travel north and east to the Gila region, the land of the Pima Indians.

In November, 1694 he "discovered" the giant ruins of a previous civilization at Casa Grande, reportedly the first account of the ruins by a white man. By the early 1700's miners and other Spaniards complained that the Jesuits had control of all the good land in Pima Country, a conflict that lasted for years. The Arizona Highways article entitled "The Trail of Padre Kino" discussed how this educated man was on a mission to educate and Christianize the Indians of the Southwest, introducing cattle and farming techniques to the region. He was reportedly killed by Indians in 1711. The Pima and Apache were rival tribes, with the latter causing great difficulties to explorers and miners for more than a century.

Early mining in the remote areas of southern Arizona has been known since Spanish times, though it was limited to mostly prospecting. Reports of Kino and these early Spanish prospects were published by Emory from his 1846 explorations through the southwest and others in the early 19th century.

Near the junction (of the Gila and Colorado rivers), on the north side, are the remains of an old Spanish Church, built near the beginning of the 17th century, by the renowned missionary, Father Kino. The mission was eventually sacked by the Indians and the inhabitants all murdered or driven off. Reports of Spanish mining in the southern Arizona region were further researched by subsequent American exploring expeditions fueled by the California Gold Rush. One of the very early companies, the Sonora Exploring and Mining Co., reported to stockholders in 1857 that a theory was held that the proportion of silver contained in the ores increases as you advance towards the north. They further opined: The idea probably originated in the famous Bolas de Plata (Balls of Silver) of Arizona, in the beginning of the last century (c1700-1710), which was, and probably still is, believed in Europe to be one of those fables, with which mining countries always abound.

Treasure Hunting Rush Ensues

Reports of the discovery of these ingots in Arizona Highways fueled more treasure hunters. Whether it was looking for buried Spanish treasure or the Lost Dutchman mine, treasure hunters crawled the hills and mountains of remote and treacherous Arizona regions looking for the mysterious and elusive rumored riches. The argument for these lost mines was not new: In fact, the Spanish were so intent on finding Quivera, the mythical city of gold, that they sent numerous expeditions into Mexico and America in search of the El Dorado. A young Paul Franklin, drawn to treasure hunting through friends he met during WWII, was an eager and gullible target for the hoaxers, and so were thousands of others. Franklin was given several photographs of the "discovery" of the ingots in the mid-1950's, one reproduced here, kindly offered from the family. Franklin thought there were two batches of ingots- one real, and one fake. He felt

"Father Kino" Famous Hoax Ingots – a New Group

By Fred N. Holabird, 2011, revised 2016

Two of the "Father Kino" ingots appeared in our November, 2011 sale. We received four more, different ingots of similar designs from another person this month. The popularity of the folklore surrounding these elaborate fakes makes them immensely marketable.

The four ingots are:

- "Juan Cruz Ano de 1755 + v", 7.79 troy ozs, 1.5 x 2.6", 0.4" thick
- "1701 Kino v + Sonora", 4.99 troy ozs, 1.6" square, 0.4" thick
- "+ V", 5.18 troy, 2" diameter, 0.25" thick
- "MM (cross) SS Juan Cruz 1755" (backwards "J"), 8.77 troy, 3.5" long, 1.2" wide, 0.4" thick

Estimate $1000 - 1500 HWAC# 42264

These ingots are very similar in design to the two listed in the 2011 article. It is perfectly clear that all six were made by the same person.

The story below, published in 2011, is reprinted here with some updates. It represents the same discussion that we'd have with these four ingots.

Introduction

The Father Kino ingots are among the great hoaxes of twentieth century numismatics. First appearing in national media print in 1947, though allegedly discovered in the 1930's, the ingots sparked a series of articles in various publications, such as the prestigious Arizona Highways Magazine. The ingots were reportedly discovered by Milton Rose in the 1930's. No information regarding the "discovery" appears in the public sector until the 1940's, after Rose put some of the bars on display at the Arizona Mining and Minerals Museum in Tucson in 1947, and a subsequent detailed article in Arizona Highways Magazine in 1948.

The story of Kino is interesting, but the underlying and even more significant "big picture" regarding the fabrication of counterfeit ingots cannot be ignored. Karl Moulton, in his book on John Ford and Paul Franklin, wrote a detailed account of his research findings that is remarkably telling in what it says and doesn't say. My take on it is that these bars are the first of a series of fake ingots made specifically to deceive the public. They show similar characteristics to many of the questioned bars supposedly discovered years later, and the alleged date of the "discovery" of the Kino ingots and subsequent initial publication far predates any involvement in the "industry" by Ford and Franklin.

the ingots with a white cast, an oxide or alkalai coating on some ingots indicated they were real or authentic. Unfortunately, that was not the case. Today, current scientific and advanced study lead to the conclusion that the ingots are fake.

New Evidence

Ernie Richards and Alan Craig's book on Spanish ingots is perhaps the best telling evidence of their fabrication. Through time, particularly after WWII, treasure hunters and divers in Florida began to find silver coin and the occasional silver bar. Then Mel Fisher hit it big with the Atocha in 1985 using a technique that his men developed to help clean the sand from the bottom of the ocean and expose the heavy metals that sat on the original ground surface, or hardpan. Because of Fisher's salvage innovations, divers began finding more and more bars, all from the mid 1500's through the eighteenth century. Wrecks from Spanish treasure fleets from 1554 (San Estiban, etc), c1590's (Power Plant wreck), 1622 (Atocha, etc), 1656 (Mimbres), 1660 (Jupiter), 1715 (Plate Fleet), 1733, 1766 (Duke of York) produced coins and ingots.

Craig & Richards' study provides factual data and information on two hundred years of Spanish ingot production in the New World, 1554-1766, showing good consistency throughout, and in fact, shows the early methods and customs used that were later carried on by American assayers a century later. Not one single ingot has been found from the treasure fleets made in the style of the Kino ingots – the outward embossed letters and unusual shapes. I find it interesting that no one discussing the Kino ingots thought to compare the legitimate silver ingots found off the Florida and other East coast areas where wrecks of Spanish treasure fleets abound.

For decades, silver ingots from the Spanish treasure fleets were being found one at a time, but rarely were publicized, until Fisher's gigantic discovery in the mid 1980's of over 920 silver bars. The embossing on the Kino ingots was made from crude carving of letters into the ingot molds. Further, the ingots were small, and many of uniform size. The smallness was possibly due to the fakers intent that the bars be made in a manner for use in monetary circulation, something generally not seen in Spanish bars, and not more common until American ingot production. Some have a crude bullion punch on the reverse with a figure of what may be royalty, as a clever attempt to show some higher governmental authority.

Research by Dr. Gene Lyon, as well as that by Craig & Richards shows that any legitimate silver bar must have the King's tax stamp to show the owner paid the quinto, or fifth tax. To not have the tax stamp indicates illegal contraband. While we now know from research that some silver processed in the Arizona region did not pay their quinto, the placement of a phony looking bullion punch on the reverse of one ingot inconsistent with the others belies the problem of the payment of the King's quinto, and thus was a poor effort to try to legitimize the fakes. Additionally, as evidenced by the many contraband bars listed by Craig and Richards, these ingots would not contain the names of men in Kino's group if they were contraband, nor would they show a sign of the Church (cross), or be dated. Many carry dates, such as 1697, 1707. Physically, the molds themselves are far too perfect, formed with vertical sides, showing no evidence of post-pour assay, a critical mistake. They are, in fact, wonderfully inventive artistic creations, but are not authentic Spanish realm silver bars.

When Moulton began his research into the Kino bars, a rather lengthy internet blog session was begun in August 2007, continuing for a solid month. Moulton diligently printed the blogs, which have perhaps more information on these bars that ever seen or read before. The trouble with blogs is that no one will write an article and stand behind their name. This renders interpretation of the blog as unsubstantiated information. Further, not one single blog offering detailed history cites any specific reference, which in the work of a professional researcher amounts to a fatal flaw. While it is reported that a man still owns most of the original hoard found more than 100 years ago, that person is not forthcoming, and serious questions arise as to the validity of any of the reports. Yet they are interesting, nonetheless.

These bars

The two bars are inscribed as follows:

A) Larger bar: DeVargas/ 1707/ MM (pic Spanish Cross)/ Sonora. NO markings on the sides, reverse with bullion punched "Conquistado". Weight 348.2 grams, 143 x 93 x 22mm. The color is off and not consistent with pure silver or a high silver content. No assay chips or place for assay. Uniform thickness. Letters embossed. Density: 11.83

B) Smaller bar: SS/ V/ M/ (pic Cross of Christ)/ 1697. No markings on the Father Kino Ingots from Sonora, Mexico, sides, or reverse. Weight 226.6 grams, 156 x 53 x 22.5 mm. The color is off and not consistent with pure silver or a high silver content. No assay chips or place for assay. Uniform thickness. Letters embossed. Density: 12.1

It was reported to Moulton that the Kino bars were 60% silver and 40% gold. On this basis, I had these two Kino bars analyzed using a Scanning Electron Microscope (SEM/EDS) and through xray fluorescence. Both methods are subject to a margin of error, as neither are true bullion assays, which would have required metal to be removed from the ingots. I had each bar analyzed at three different spots, one place on the front, one on the back, and one along the sides. There was excellent homogeneity in the data for each bar for the three sample localities. The results are the following:

	Small bar	Large Bar	Comparison 1	Comparison 2
Gold	none	none	none	none
Silver	65.6%	58.2%	56%	56%
Zinc	13.5%	15.5%	17%	17%
Copper	13.6%	20.5%	22%	22%
Tin	6.9%	5.1%	5%	5%
Iron	0.09%	0.19%	none	none
Titanium	0.28%	none	none	none
Lead	none	0.47%	none	none

When a mining geologist or geochemist looks at these results, there is an immediate anomaly, perhaps not visible to others. Different precious metal ore deposits are formed in different ways, as are minerals and their natural associations. Often, there is metallic zoning associated with many ore deposits, though this zoning may take place in anything from tens of feet to thousands of feet. Every ore deposit is different, but there are characteristics that allow geologists to group some of these deposits into categories. This “grouping” if you will, allows for further in-depth study, analysis, and comparison to other ore deposits that ultimately forms the platforms we use to explore and look for more ore anywhere in the world.

There are also many different kinds of ore deposits that can contain the associated minerals and the ores that contain them. The discussion of the geochemistry of differing ore deposits is beyond the scope of this paper, but it is necessary to bring some of that data to bear in this discussion so that you can see where I am going. Also coming into play are the metallurgical processes used in reducing or smelting the original ores. Not all metals are routinely retained in the original dore, for a number of reasons. The discussion of this is also beyond the scope of this paper.

The silver-copper-zinc-tin alloy present in these ingots can be natural, though the smelting of the original ore and associated minerals in their natural form to render a dore product such as present in these ingots is problematic. The occurrence of Tin in the Kino ingots is a striking anomaly. It becomes difficult to image an ore deposit containing these four metals as the major metals occurring in their natural state. While I cannot think of an example, and a search of mining geologic literature failed to locate any such deposit, I always keep an open mind. But the formation processes of these minerals and ores is different, as is their mode of occurrence. The mere appearance of the tin in these ingots suggests that the ingots are a man-made constructed alloy using tin as a hardening agent. It appears to be a relatively new alloy used for brazing in particular, which would harden hi-tech metal pipe joints making the joints more stable and long lasting. In a literature search of historic alloys, I was unable to locate a natural or manmade alloy of this nature until after 1940 or so. One of the standard texts of silver alloys, Silver in Industry, has no such alloy, though it certainly could have been invented by that time. In fact of further note, the occurrence of tin in a natural silver-copper-zinc dore is entirely unreported, as far as I can find. In a search of alloys on the internet, two alloys were easily found with similarities to the Kino bars. They are listed on the charts as comparison 1 and 2. These manmade constructed alloys are a modern metallurgic creation. The occurrence of these metals in this association is not natural.

The question of tin in silver deposits begs discussion. Silver tin minerals are almost non-existent. Only a few are known, listed in Dana’s Text of Mineralogy. Stannite (copper, iron zinc, tin, no silver), Canfieldite silver tin sulfide), Teallite (lead tin sulfide) are the only related minerals listed in the classic text. All are found in Bolivia, though some of these are also found in places such as Freiberg. None of these minerals carry the characteristics of the contents of the dore in these Kino ingots. Silver and tin districts occur near each other only in Bolivia, where a rare association of silver and tin are known in a manner not seen elsewhere in the world. The ores of southern Arizona and northern Mexico do not appear to contain these Silver tin copper zinc elemental associations. But the Copper-zinc association in the Kino dore defies the natural mineral association even at Bolivian deposits. The question is then posed “is this dore the combined dore (comingled) from two different distinct types of silver ore deposits” (one of which is unique to Bolivia) and if so, is the only possible source Bolivia?

Common sense destroys any such argument about comingled ores. In the seventeenth century, silver was used solely for monetary purposes. The addition of tin to a dore made it infinitely more difficult to put the silver into a useable form – money. Thus there was no purpose, need or economic interest in combining these metals. It simply would have been easier to keep them separate.

Other Independent Analytics of Kino Bars

I was unable to find information on whether anyone had ever tested the Kino bars, either for silver/gold or density. Regardless of testing, a simple measurement of density could be made without the need, or in addition to, an expensive lab test. Accordingly, each of these two bars was carefully measured and density calculated (density is the weight in grams divided by the volume in cubic centimeters). The density of silver is 10.49. The density of these two bars exceeds that, and thus must be an alloy. For the density of the bars to be higher than silver, a metal or metals must have been added to the melt to increase density. This is usually only done for hardening purposes in a manner similar to how steel has been strengthened through time, and also in a manner used by the Mint with gold, by the addition of copper to cause less wear to coins. Because they scratch easily with a paperclip, yet possess a positive to the “ring” test, there is the appearance of a high silver content, perhaps with the addition of some hardening metal, which could be any number of industrial alloys. Little can be surmised from the density differences of the two, since we only have a data base of two specimens for comparison.

Conclusion

The Kino ingots were placed into the American marketplace more than six decades ago amidst a cloud of uncertainty and questions. Their origin has carefully been kept secret, letting rumors fly in the wake of clever stories, most rendered without a shred of proof. The men or man who made them carefully placed them into the numismatic world. Over time, other suspicious precious metal ingots were also placed into the numismatic world. The place of origin of many of these questionable or fake ingots was Arizona. The men responsible continued to improve their techniques and place more bad ingots into circulation. The Kino ingots seen and tested here are, in all probability and currently beyond the possibility of reasonable doubt, fake. The chemistry of the ingots underlies this fact, given that the association of the specific metals contained herein are not natural. It is further emphasized by the direct tie of this specific alloy to a man made, constructed metal alloy used in modern times, thought to be developed after about 1940. These two bars were clearly made in a manner to look like silver, feel like silver, and weigh like silver. They were thus made to deceive.

Lot # 3141 California, Nevada City Nevada City Mint Silver Bar 1975 Serial Number 346. .999 fine and weighs DWT 5; Grams 3. In original case. (Paper in case is warped and and handwritten parts are bleeding.) Est. $50 ~ $75 HWAC# 42670

Lot # 3142 California, Rosalie Large Broken Copper Ingot A

large broken copper ingot, originally over 12" long and 6" wide. The ingot weighs 49 pounds. It was found at a smelter site at Rosalie, San Bernardino County in 2008 by a metal detectorist. The site contained the copper world mine smelter. The Ivan-pah Smelting Company of Los Angeles was the smelter for the order, built in 1898. The first two years of the operation produced 11,000 tons of ore at 13% copper. In 1902, the mine started up again, but it only lasted a short while. In 1906, the mine and smelter were again put into production until 1908. It went idle until a restart from 1916 to after World War II. Most of what was left was scrapped and cleaned up. This large ingot appears to be remnants left behind and missed by that later clean up. This is a very crude copper ingot, typical of an operation that was small. It is a choice remnant of San Bernardino mining history. Est. $300 ~ $500 HWAC# 43640

Lot # 3143 Colorado, Cripple Creek Cripple Creek Gold Ingot 1880's-90's Cripple Creek gold ingot--Cripple Creek, Colorado, 999 Fine, 1.253 TR. OZ. Beautiful piece of Gold History! Rectangular in shape, this small ingot measures 28 x 16 mm. Gold mining in the district begun in the 1890s, mostly as underground operations, chasing high grade veins. Over 23 million ounces of gold have been recovered from the district since 1890. At 2012 prices ($1600 per troy ounce), this would be worth around US$ 37 billion. Warren, Harry & Frank Woods entered the Victor mining scene when they purchased the Mount Rosa Placer and incorporated the Mt. Rosa Mining, Milling and Land Company on January 9, 1892. This would later become known as the Cripple Creek & Victor Gold Mine. Est. $2,000 ~ $4,000 HWAC# 41916

pioneer gold coins) 1867 Check issued from Geo. T. Clark & Co., Bankers. Clark, Gruber & Co. were some of the first bankers in Colorado, issuing gold pieces made from Colorado Gold Rush (Pike's Peak) gold dust. Their bank in Denver was the predecessor to the US Mint office, which bought their office and equipment in 1863. Though George Clark shared a name with a founder, he was not related. He did, however, work for the firm when it was in Denver, acting as cashier and agent for gold dust. He bought the firm's bank in Central City in 1865. This check paid for exchange of 75 cents. Dateline Central City, Colorado, Oct. 30, 1867. Stamped Paid by Rocky Mountain National Bank. Two spindle holes and cut cancelled. (Prag Collection) Est. $100 ~ $150 HWAC# 34875

Lot # 3174 Nevada, Carson City Premier Group of Carson City Bank Checks & Stock Certificates 1875-1901 Lot of 17 from two important Carson City banks in the 19th century.

Important signatures! 1) The Carson City Savings Bank. Eight issued certificates of deposit (in US gold coin) (1875-76) with the great vignette of an 1870 gold coin. Also, an 1884 Original of Exchange (currency) signed by T.R. Hofer. Plus an unissued but desirable stock for the bank with copper foil vignette of bald eagle. 2) The Bullion and Exchange Bank (which took over for the Carson City Savings Bank). Rare group of seven issued stock certificates (1887-1901). Includes pieces issued to prominent Carson citizens Trenmor Coffin and JP Woodbury (who operated the Brunswick Mill). Signed by important figures such as T.R. Hofer as cashier/secretary and three different presidents: Jacob Klein, H.M. Gorham, and Richard Kirman. Hofer served as 7th superintendent to the Carson City Mint (the B&E bank later had an office in the mint). Klein founded the Bullion & Exchange Bank and later had interests in the Carson Gas Works and Carson Brewery. Gorham worked in mines in Gold Hill (like the Yellow Jacket) before also running the Savage Mine. Richard Kirman Sr. became mayor of Reno and later governor of Nevada. All stocks are pen cancelled. Lot # 3184 Pigot & Co. Universal Money Table and Commercial Exchange Standard Broadside A spectacular early broadside dating to 1828. 39 x 26.5". Full color. This spectacular chart, which appears to be an early copy of very fine quality, shows all the gold coins of the world and a chart of their weights and relative value with respect to each other. There are virtually hundreds of coins depicted in great detail on the broadside. The two US gold coins depicted are 1827. From the text: "The entire arranged and translated from a celebrated French work and greatly improved with many valuable additions, by L.A.J. Mordaque, author of the french orthologer history of Napoleon and other works. Member of the Manchester Literary and Philosophical Society." The printing quality here is so high as to suggest this could be an original. The work that would've been in the original French work was pasted together of many sheets, as evidenced here. The piece is framed in black ebony and gold trim. Please inspect. Est. $200 ~ $500 HWAC# 43564
